Scholar Activism and Israel/Palestine

Scholars across the disciplines have for years accepted that the work they do - in the classroom and in their published work - is "political" in one way or another. But how do scholars become activists? What is the historical relationship of scholarship and activism in the United States? What does this relationship look like in our moment? This forum will engage these questions with a special emphasis on their salience in contemporary debates surrounding Israel/Palestine. Our panel of self-identified scholar-activists, all of whom have engaged with Israel/Palestine in their own work, will discuss these pressing issues from a variety of academic and political perspectives.
