Spring 2015 Forum Series

Center for Innovative Teaching

Civic Engagement, New Media, and Critical Pedagogy

As resources are increasingly diverted from social sciences and humanities programs, the language used to describe the state of public higher education is one of catastrophe. This forum showcases important new work that challenges this narrative of perpetual crisis and futility. What are the new teaching practices that have transformed community-based teaching and learning at UMass Boston and beyond? How do we use new media tools to empower our students as scholars, critical thinkers, and producers of culture? What do we learn from our students and community partners in the process? How can we use new technologies critically and seek out new audiences for our scholarly and pedagogical work? The speakers will engage with these questions and discuss their own pedagogical and publishing initiatives.
